Jellied Eels for Kemtile

Kemtile Ltd, hygienic flooring specialists to the food and pharmaceutical industries, have won a contract to supply floors, stainless steel kerbs, ceiling and wall finishes to a jellied eel processing plant in Middlesex. The company is F.R Bradley (Feltham) Ltd and their 250sqm unit is close to Terminal 4 Heathrow Airport.

F R Bradley's are one of three main UK suppliers of jellied eels. They supply Tesco, Safeway and Sainsbury's. To ensure that the product is as fresh as possible there will be two live eel storage tanks within the factory. Kemtile will be lining them both with water proof, chemical resistant membranes.

Frank Bradley told us why he chose Kemtile after seeing their advertisement in an industry magazine. "The thing I liked about Kemtile was that Jamie (Jamie Cook, Director) was hands on. He gave you confidence that the job was going to be done properly because he was there to make sure. They also took me to another factory to show me how the walls were to be done. This all inspired confidence. The price wasn't the cheapest, but I felt I had the best advice and that they didn't take advantage of me with the price".

The project will start in early November and will take 3 to 4 weeks. The floors will be the KAGETEC BS ceramic tiling system. Kemtile is the exclusive UK and Ireland applicator for KAGETEC Tiling Systems engineered in Germany by Van Koetsveld and Grimberg GmbH specifically for use in demanding environments. The walls and ceilings will be finished with Protectorseal and the stainless steel kerbs will be manufactured by SAW McBride & Sons to their standard specification is 2mm thick grade 316 stainless steel. Mc Bride kerbs can be supplied up to 20 metres long.
